Environmental Missions: Planting Churches and Trees

Presenter: Lowell Bliss

Environmental issues, including global climate change, represent the greatest opportunity for church-planting among the least-reached in our generation. In this webinar I intend to illustrate this with a case study of a Muslim country which the World Watch List calls “one of the least evangelized countries in the world.”

World class botanist William Carey is proof enough that environmental missions is not entirely a new category of missions and yet the pressing needs and complexities of our current global ecological crisis and the strategic opportunities it presents for ministry indicate how well-advised missionaries are to integrate creation care with church-planting. The Cape Town Commitment, calling for “urgent and prophetic” action on creation care, has supplied an unprecedented mandate for environmental missions.

This webinar is an opportunity to explore how your ministry might reach out to the environmentally-distressed with the whole gospel of Jesus Christ.

Eden Vigil, although a project of Christar, seeks to mobilize and facilitate environmental missionaries to whatever people group and with whatever agency the Lord might call them.

Lowell Bliss is the director of Eden Vigil, an environmental missions initiative which combines creation care with church planting among the least-reached. He and his wife spent fourteen years in North India and Pakistan, church-planting among Hindus and Muslims as a leader of Christar teams. He is the publisher of the Environmental Missions Prayer Digest, and the author of The Agabus Project (podcast and blog), as well as of a forthcoming book, bearing the same title as the webinar, Environmental Missions: Planting Churches and Trees.
